

Ladies and gentlemen,
Distinguished guests,
Dear parents, dear friends,

We are gathered here today in a spirit of reflection and deep emotion to inaugurate this memorial site dedicated to our late brother, Laye Alama Condé.

His passing remains a deep wound for our family. According to the information and testimonies available to us, Laye is believed to have lost his life as a result of acts of torture, notably through the forced administration of emetic substances. This tragic death has left behind a profound grief that the years have not erased.

But today, beyond the pain, we wish above all to remember the man that Laye was: a generous, caring, courageous brother who was deeply devoted to his family.

One memory, in particular, remains etched in our minds.

More than twenty years ago, from Germany, Laye Alama Condé sent a bicycle to our brother Laye Namandjan Condé, so that he would no longer have to walk long distances every day to get to university.

On that day, Laye Namandjan's joy became the joy of the whole family.

Parents, brothers and sisters – everyone celebrated this gesture and thanked Laye Alama. He was with us then, living here in Bremen.

Today, that bicycle represents much more than just a gift. It has become a symbol of a brother who, even whilst far from his loved ones, thought of their future. A brother who knew how to give, to share and to turn one person's happiness into happiness for a whole family.

It is this image of Laye that we want to pass on to our children and future generations.

Before leaving for Germany in search of a better future, Laye had brought us all together. His words still echo in our hearts:

'Dear parents, I need your blessing for the adventure that lies ahead. And the rest of you, take good care of our parents. Go to school, work hard and never let yourselves be discouraged. One day, everything will change for our family.'

These words are now much more than a memory. They constitute his moral legacy.

Laye set off with dreams, responsibilities and the hope of helping to build a better future for his family. His disappearance has therefore left not only an immense emotional void, but also shattered hopes and an unfulfilled family promise.

That is why we respectfully hope that the city of Bremen and the relevant authorities will consider the possibility of allowing three members of our family to come to Germany, in particular to undertake vocational training, to help preserve Laye's memory and, in accordance with the law, to explore the possibilities for recognition, moral redress and support that might bring some comfort to his family.

This request is motivated neither by anger nor by a desire for revenge.

Our initiative is one of remembrance.
An endeavour for truth.
A quest for justice.
And, above all, a quest for dignity.

Dear Laye Alama Condé, we shall not forget your words, your generosity, or the hopes you held for your family.

And we will not forget that bicycle which, more than twenty years ago, brought so much joy to our family, because through it, it was already your heart speaking.

Today, this memorial will ensure that your memory lives on amongst us.

May this place bear witness to your time on this earth, remind future generations of your story, and preserve your memory for ever.

May God welcome you into His mercy and grant you eternal rest.

Rest in peace, Laye Alama Condé.
We will never forget you.

Thank you.
